ARLEY RAILWAY FATALITY

Inquest on Engine Driver Adjourned for Further Evidence

For the first time since the war-time restrictions on juries were rescinded on May 1st this year, a jury assisted the Coroner (Mr. C. W. Illiffe) at an inquest held at the Nuneaton Police Station on Monday.

The inquest was on George Edward Canning, a 46-year-old engine driver, of Mr. Trefford Lane, Birmingham 8, who was fatally injured on the L.M.S. Railway near Arley, on Saturday morning. Following a recommendation from the jury the Coroner adjourned the inquest until May 20th so that further essential evidence could be obtained and other important witnesses be present.

A 23-year-old fireman, William Winnard, of 18, Somerset Street, Saltley, Birmingham, told the court that he accompanied Canning in the cab of the 2.10 a.m. mineral train from Water Orton to Peterborough on Saturday morning. At about 3.35 a.m. deceased, who was the driver, was looking out of the cab when another goods train, travelling in the opposite direction, passed by. He heard a bump and saw Canning slump back over the reversing gear and on further examination found him bleeding from a cut across the head and unconscious. After he had put deceased in a comfortable position he took charge of the train, and at Arley signal box he stopped and asked the signalman to wire ahead for an ambulance to meet the train at Nuneaton station. Canning was then taken to Nuneaton hospital.

Doctor's Evidence.

Dr. N Exton-Smith, casualty officer at Nuneaton Hospital, said that when the deceased was admitted to hospital at 4.15 a.m. he was already dead, the cause of death being severe head injuries and a probable fracture of the skull producing laceration o fthe brain.

Asked by the Coroner if he had ever driven a train before, Winnard said that he had never taken charge of an engine before this event occurred. Complimenting the young fireman on his level-headed behaviour, the Coroner said it was indeed a praiseworthy effort and he had done everything he possibly could under the circumstances.

The Open Doors.

Sidney Peach, of 18, Newby Street, Leicester, who was the guard on the goods train travelling from Leicester to Birmingham on Saturday morning, was also called to give evidence. He said that he did not see deceased's train because he was looking out on the off side. It was a pitch black night and he had heard nothing unusual about 3.30 a.m. When the train reached Water Orton it was stopped by a signalman who informed the driver that a van door was open. The driver and a shunter then closed the door and told him what they had done. Peach said that he had examined the doors at Nuneaton and they were all closed, but as the train had stopped at Stockingford and the Tunnel Colliery and on both occasions the train had started violently he thought that the jerks may have caused the two big doors of the van to open. The catch was loose in the holders.

Mr. W. J. Evans (representing the Association and Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen): "You made no examination of the train at Water Orton.

Witness: No

Mr. Evans: Are you conversant with Rule 131 which states that guards must satisfy themselves before commencement that all doors are fastened.

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Evans: You allowed the train to continue on the assurances of the driver and shunter.

Witness: Yes.

Summing up the Coroner said that there could be no reasonable doubt that the cause of death was accidental, but he asked the railway company to take the matter up seriously. Guards on goods trains should make a thorough check. It seemed obvious that the open doors had caused the accident.

Court Adjourned.

The foreman of the jury said that the jury felt there was some neglect in the matter and asked for the case to be adjourned so that the driver of the other train and the shunter concerned could be present in court. They also asked if it were possible to have the van involved in the accident brought to Nuneaton for examination. Mr. Evans asked if a standard drawing of the mechanism of van door catch could be produced. Mr. J. White (representing the L.M.S. Railway Company) said that if it were possible these requests would be compiled with.

THEFT FROM CO-OP

Nuneaton Woman Fined

NUNEATON MAGISTRATES' COURT—(Monday).

Before: Mr. H. Cleaver (presiding), Ald. J. Randle, Mr. F. P. Pemberton, Mr. G. Moore, Mrs. W. Cross and Mr. J. Lenton.

Daisy Kathleen Pratt, 20, Victoria Street, Nuneaton, was charged with stealing a table mirror, valued £1 8s 6d., the property of Nuneaton Co-operative Society, Ltd., on May 7th. She pleaded not guilty. Mr. H. W. F. Clay represented defendant. Mr. J. Lenton did not adjudicate.

Mr. G. C. Teebay, for the prosecution, said that about 3 o'clock in the afternoon in question Miss Stringer, in charge of the fancy goods department on the ground floor of Abbey Street Co-op, saw defendant, Mrs. Pratt, looking at various articles, and then pick up and examine a table mirror, not the subject of the charge, and put it back. She then picked up a photo frame and put it back. She asked no questions of any assistant in that department. After about five minutes defendant went upstairs to the furnishing department, where Mr. Dewis, first assistant, and Mr. Newcombe, another assistant, were on duty. Mr. Dewis saw her walking round the department, and she looked at a china cabinet and asked him the price of it. He told her. On top of the china cabinet was the table mirror, the subject of the charge.

Defendant and Mirror had Gone.

Dewis was called away to the ground floor. Newcombe saw defendant examine the mirror. On Dewis's return both defendant and the mirror had gone. Newcombe would say he never sold the mirror to defendant. Dewis went into Abbey Street and saw defendant get on her bicycle. He could see the top of the mirror protruding from her bag. He kept her in sight and she got off her cycle at Parsons and Sherwin's, Newdegate Street, and went into the shop. Dewis called P.C. Davies, and she was stopped coming out of the shop. Dewis asked her where she got the mirror from, and she replied that she purchased it from the Co-op Society. Asked for her receipt, she said she did not wait for the check. She was asked to go back to the Co-op and point out the person who served her. She pointed out Miss Stringer, of the fancy department, and said "Did not I buy the mirror from you." Miss Stringer replied that she did not and that was a fact. She was taken to the police station, and in her possession was £28 6s. 3½d. in money, coupon books, etc., and several Co-op Society cheques, but not one to tally with the price of £1 8s. 6d. The mirror, when examined, was found to be scratched and one could not make out a stroke and "6d." There was no duplicate in Miss Stringer's pad of any transaction with defendant.

Evidence was given by Grace Stringer, who, cross-examined, denied seeing defendant put down 28s 6d. for the mirror, and said the mirror produced was not one out of her department.

William Dewis and George Newcombe, assistants, also gave evidence.

Dewis stated that the mirror he saw in accused's shopping bag was unwrapped.

P.C. Davies said he examined Miss Stringer's check receipt book and could find no entry of the price of the mirror.

Mr. Clay: From the moment you spoke to her outside Parsons and Sherwin and asked her to go back with you, did she give you every assistance to clear up the mystery?

P.C. Davies: Yes. She went back with me.

Defendant's Evidence.

Mrs. Pratt giving evidence said that when she asked the price of the china cabinet she did not notice a mirror on it. She bought the mirror from Miss Stringer and tendered the right money. She never waited for her check when she gave the right money. She put the mirror in her bag and went to the Abbey Mart for about 10 minutes before going to Parsons and Sherwin.

Mr. Clay said defendant was a woman of exemplary character, and was married, with two grown-up children.

The Chairman said the Bench, seeing that it was defendant's first offence, and she had a very good record, would treat the case leniently, and she would be fined £2 and 15s. special costs.

Parking Offence.

Richard Graham Osbaldeston, 3, Dale Street, Leamington Spa, summoned for a unilateral parking offence in Queen's Road on April 10, was fined £1.
